SURFING IN ONE LESSON

"Turkey" Alan Love who is a proficient teacher of surfing to the eager beaver malihini had a pupil the other day. This party learned at once, in one lesson to catch a wave by himself. That is by himself if Turkey went along and pointed out the right spot where the wave would break, he did fine.

So this character thought he'd go out alone. He tried and tried—no good. He came back, disgusted and ready to give up. Turkey explained that you must stay at the right place as the waves only rise at certain spots, usually where it is shallow. So the party tried again—with no better results. Back he came full of bitterness.

Turkey who is the soul of ingenuity thought out the problem, studied the situation and solved it. The solution was novel to say the least. He secured a heavy tile and tied it to a light cord for an anchor. Then he tied on a light float with a white gear on a stick for a flag. With this gear he went out to the surf with the malihini, dropped the anchor at a right place and told the party to come back to the place everytime after each ride.

The malihini followed directions and had no more pilikia. Turkey is securing a copyright and patent on the idea. All infringements will be prosecuted.
