

ANGELENOS EASE OUT WIN OVER SURF FIVE

The City of Los Angeles basketball five clinched their right to the Pacific title when they put the Indian sign on the Outrigger cagers, Hawaiian title holders, Saturday night, at the National Guard armory, winning 34 to 21.

The game was a repetition of the former ones, the visitors stepping up in the last period and handing it from both sides and the middle. They held a steady pace during the first three laps, and then forged ahead on the home stretch, winning by superior speed. The home team played a brilliant game, but was outclassed.

The game was characterized by a cheerful disregard for personal injuries manifested by both aggregations. At the first whistle it was seen that no ping-pong or 'you first' stuff would be restarted to. Both teams went after it in earnest and wasted little time on formality.

How It Went

The first session ended with the count even, both having collected nine credits during the scrimmage. In the second quarter they went at it harder than ever, the visitors finishing seven points ahead but without showing any more stuff than the home team. Half time saw the score stand 19-12.

The second half was the Angelenos by a large margin. In the final quarter they opened up with the teamwork and passing that they have exhibited in the dying moments of former games, and cut circles around the surfers. Swan was given a rest and Scott was fed.
