

This is the big day in the Olympic Games so far as Hawaii is concerned for the sprints are on!

It certainly was a treat to read how Mariechen Wehselau performed yesterday at the Olympic Games in the relay race when she increased the lead "without apparent effort" and finished 18 seconds ahead.

That means that she won by at least 25 yards or half the length of the pool and considering the fact that the lead she started with was none too great, it indicates that the island girl is in remarkable form.

Warren Kealoha's victory in the 100 meters backstroke was not unexpected. The island swim fans generally look upon Warren as a sure thing in the supine race. In fact local fans would have been astounded had he failed to win. But win he did and he too must be in excellent form since his work in the final saw a new Olympic record.
