

HUI MAKANI WORKING HARD FOR NEXT MEET

HARVEY CHILTON is putting his mermen through a stiff program of training in preparation for the A.A.U. swimming meet scheduled for the Palama tank next week. The swimmers are turning out regularly for work under Chilton, and according to reports, he has rounded his squad into fine trim.

Warren Kealoha will be entered in the backstroke and the sprint events and the world's champion looks to be in as good shape as when he ran off with his second Olympic title in Paris in 1924. Although Warren is still packing around some excess weight, he has cut the old waistline down and is clipping off his distances in fine times.

Henry Luning and Charlie Pung, Kealoha's partners in the backstroke events, are both entered and will be strong contenders for the title. They are pressing Warren closely in the daily time trials and should make the champion step fast to win on Lincoln's birthday—the day of the meet. Bill Kirschbaum's times in the breaststroke indicate that he will be out gunning for new records.

Chilton will also present Napoleon in the sprint events. This chap has graduated from the novice ranks and is ready for faster company, says his coach. Besides these stars, Chilton has discovered a new aquatic star who may be uncovered at the meet next week.

With Outrigger entering a large list of swimmers, the A.A.U. meet should be a headline attraction. The fans should turn out in full force for the gala occasion.
