

HE MENTIONS MARIECHEN, CRABBE

THE ADVERTISER tomorrow will carry a story on its sports pages quoting John T. Taylor, chairman of the Olympic Swimming committee, as saying that Clarence Crabbe and Mariechen Wehselau are among the outstanding swimmers of the United States. Reading between the lines, it can easily be seen that this pair rate a trip to Amsterdam if they can arrange to go. And both probably will go. Nothing was said about Warren Kealoha or Lily Bowmer May.

Taylor's statement is significant and at the same time disheartening, for he usually has the last word to say about the makeup of the American swimming team.

All the more reason why other ambitious Hawaiian swimmers should work like the very dickens to show speed and class at the trials to be held here on April 19, so they can be selected as members of the Hawaiian team slated to take a trip to the mainland trials, and while over there show some of the so-called champions that Hawaii has more than two swimmers eligible for the Olympic team.

Our swimmers can do this if they will buckle down to business and hit the ball.
