Outriggers paddle into picture as candidate for official state sport

By Bonnie Verhoff
Advertiser Government Bureau

legislature '85

Hawaii has a state song, a state tree and, most recently, a state fish. So it only makes sense that the Legislature is looking into designating a state sport: outrigger canoe paddling.

At least that's the idea of Rep. Cam Cavasso, Republican from Lanikai-Keolu-Waimanalo, whose father first put him in a canoe at the age of two and who has raced since 13.

Paddling "reaches out to all people of Hawaii from 12 years and younger to the kupuna (elders)," he said. "It encourages the family to come together."

Cavasso introduced a resolution, which has paddled out of House Ocean and Marine Resources Committee, endorsing the idea of outrigger canoe paddling as an official state sport and suggesting a bill to that effect be introduced next year. The resolution was adopted by the House.

Cavasso said he wants the sport to be taken more seriously by the state. Some racers aren't even welcome on beaches here, he said.

The head coach and director of the Outrigger Canoe Club, Henry Ayau, recently told the House committee that in ancient Hawaii, outrigger canoes were used to move families, armies, food and animals between the islands.

The president of the Hawaiian Canoe Racing Association, Michael Tongg, said paddling has become increasingly popular. Over 60 canoe clubs are currently in Hawaii compared to just four 35 years ago, he said.

Outrigger Teams Off to USVBA Nationals

Three Outrigger Canoe Club men's volleyball teams will take the courts at next week's U.S. Volleyball Association National Championships at Hofstra University in New York.

The OCC Masters will be out to defend its two-time title in the 35-and-older bracket while the OCC Golden Masters is looking to regain its form that won the 1982 title. The OCC Open team, with four U.S. national team members, is out for its first title.

"It's going to be tough," said OCC Open team coach Dean Nowack of the May 13-18 tournament "In our division, there are five very, very good teams with players coming back from Italy's pro league and top California players."

The open team includes national team members Ralph Smith and Jon Andersen, both of Hawaii, and U.S. Olympians Craig Buck and Steve Salmons. Salmons, however, injured his hand last week and is listed as doubtful.

The Masters return last year's MVP in Jon Stanley but "it will be really tough for them to repeat," said Nowack. "Last year's second- and third-place teams, Legends and Chuck's, have combined members in a sort of 'Dump Outrigger' movement."

The Golden Masters are "real healthy," added Nowack, and anticipate a top five finish.

Members of the OCC teams are:

Open: Jon Andersen, Craig Buck, Elgin Calles, R.D. Gray, Marc Haine, Kenny Morrow, Steve Salmons, Trevor Schirman, Ralph Smith. Coach—Dean Nowack.

Masters: Chris Crabb, John Haneberg, Charlie Jenkins, Tom Madison, Tom Selleck, Dave Shoji, Randy Shaw, Jon Stanley.

Golden Masters: Bill Baird, Peter Baiding, Hugh Foster, Tom Haine, Dave Hendrickson, Fred Hlapo, Bob Kashiare, Dan Oredson, Rich Riffero. Coach—Ron Sorrell.

Marlin are warming up to the idea of arriving in Hawaii waters early

KAILUA-KONA — Some random notes from the marlin capital of Hawaii:

They're biting. Although it's early in the season, people are hooking into a lot of big marlin these days, according to Dr. Chuck Daxboeck, a scientist with the Pacific Gamefish Foundation. The organization is based in Kailua-Kona.

Daxboeck

"I have no idea why they are biting this early," Daxboeck said. "Perhaps the water is warming or returning to normal faster than expected after that last real severe El Nino (cold-water current). The waters are probably a degree or a degree and a half warmer than normal for this time of year, and I suspect the females are following the warmer water."

The marlin mystique remains because scientists still don't know exactly where the fish travels from.

Marathon Marlin. A black marlin weighing 130 pounds was caught and tagged on Jan. 6, 1983, off Cabo San Lucas, Mexico. Twenty-one months later, on Sept. 11, 1984, it was recovered northwest of New Zealand. The marlin traveled 5,763 miles, moving from the Northern Hemisphere to the Southern Hemisphere. It set the world record for longest distance traveled in a straight line.

Man against marlin. One of the longest man vs. fish battles ever recorded took place last September off Kona.

Jamie Berzanskis, Jerry Shaughnessy and Lincoln Ahlo Jr. tied into a marlin that weighed between 1,000 and 2,000 pounds. Captain Ralph Rehberg of Kona said the action started at 10 a.m. on a Wednesday and lasted until the huge fish broke the line and swam free at 8:30 a.m. the next day.

The anglers took turns in the fighting chair and, even though it was three against one, the marlin won.

Marlin moves. The Pacific Gamefish Foundation, a non-profit organization that studies marlin habits, has moved to more spacious headquarters in the Gentry's Kona Marina at Honokohau Harbor. It will be open to the public perhaps as early as next month.

Waterlog

Dr. Tom Walinski donated his racing yacht, Moonshadow, to the University of Hawaii sailing team. . . . Captain Aili's Charter Locker will soon be on television as part of a 10-minute film on marlin fishing. The film will feature Kona boats and skippers. . . . Waikiki Yacht Club junior sailors are learning the ropes early, according to junior sailor and publicity chairman Marc Garrison. On May 11, they are organizing, sponsoring and conducting a regatta for sailors 18 and younger. . . . Paddler Kevin Olds is in training for the 1988 Olympics as a kayak racer.
