

PERFECT DAY FOR SWIM IN WAIKIKI SURF

Gentle Glow of Spring,
However Did Not Bring Out Crowd

OLD TIMERS ON HAND IN OUTRIGGER CANOES

The surf was calm, the beach more quiet than usual. It was Easter—minus the cross, minus the white flowing robes.

Still, the gentle glow of spring exercised its magic. There were those who could not resist the low rolling combers and the warmth of the yellow sand. A representative showing of black and yellow canoes, with an occasional surfboard rider, climbed the smoking seas.

The shady Moana benches, and the hau thatched pergolas of the Moana and the Outrigger sheltered a goodly number of loiterers. An overtone of the season was discernible in their attire. One hundred and thirty-eight guests were registered for luncheon and dinner at the Outrigger. Yoshi, the kimono clad hostess of the guest house, entered 58 swimmers in her book.

Mrs. Morrison, acting chaperone, entered 15 more. About 200 men enjoyed the privileges of the club in the course of the day.

Gray's beach had a few rain or shine habitués of the immediate neighborhood. Even the much lauded strand in front of the Waikiki Inn was less frequented than usual, and the parking spaces on Kalakaua avenue were less densely occupied than is their habit.

But the old-timers were still faithful. "Dad" Center took out a sailing party of five celebrities in one of the big canoes. Coming back they were swamped, just outside the reef. Meriechen Wehslau, woman's Island champion, proved her stamina by swimming home more than a mile. Her floundering companions—Margaret Gillis, Helen Moses, and Buster Brown—were so much occupied with righting the canoe that they lost sight of her and were really worried before they learned she had gained the beach in safety.

Easter fashions in bathing suits, if sparsely in evidence, made up for it by their attractiveness. Something entirely new was a dark blue one-piece suit of woolen, embroidered in silk, of a lighter tone. A front panel of conventionally designed embroidery, with the very new girdle of the same pattern, was shown in a costume worn by Margaret Gillis.

Even the everyday frock is freely embroidered nowadays, but this is the first intimation of a tendency to treat bathing suits in the same fashion.

Among those registered at the Outrigger guest house were: Mrs. George E. Maule, E. Silverman, D. Anderson, Mrs. R. H. Ely, Mrs. Burrell, Miss Burrell, A. West, Mrs. J. Hall Hearne, Amelia Coates, Alice M. Sharp, Mrs. F. O. Cullins, G. Remick, Clara Fraser, R. Laird, M. Sloss, D. Millrand, Mr. M. Nichols, Lillie Bowmer, Mrs. A. Hiliger, Geo. Searle, Beatrice Newport, C. Centhran, Meriechen Wehslau, Betty May, M. Prundell, Constance Davis, G. Wilson, A. West, R. Frans, E. C. Barnes, A. Deverill, D. Reynolds, M. Thomas, M. Winter, Ronalds Meldram, L. Ames, F. Southerland, Ruth Cooley, Mrs. J. F. Irmer, A. M. Johnson, Mrs. R. T. Moss, Dot Marlin, Ruth Lamonde, R. T. Newman, R. G. Sturle, J. Cameron, J. T. Annette, Mrs. Stan Leigh, Eleanor Curry, J. H. Ritchie.

Mrs. Morrison registered Mrs. W. Deasy, Mrs. W. N. Chaffee, Mrs. C. S. Goodnight, Cecil Black, Mrs. D. F. Pullaway, Mrs. J. E. Hughes, Mrs. W. N. Bellinger, Mrs. M. W. N. Solomon.

At the club proper, among men registered were: James Asch, Clarence Asch, "Mouse" Smith, R. McKenzie, Gay Harris, A. Hayne, C. Ellis, Roy Marston, Jog Fuller, Ed Dekum, Gustav Ballentyne, Percy Deverill, Buster Brown and Edrick Cooke.