

HUI NALU BOYS GIVE SWIM FANS A THRILL

Through the stillness of the tropical night in the midst of the staging of the women's plunge in the Punahou tank at the mermaid meet, voices, sweet, plaintive Hawaiian voices, rose in chorus from the upper portion of the waikiki bleachers carrying the strains of "Imi au ia oe." And when the last soul-stirring notes had died away an echo answered, faint and far away, from beyond the ewa bleachers. It was absolutely sublime and it proved to be one of the real thrills of the mermaid meet Saturday night.

The credit for the thrill goes to the Hui Nalu boys who not only planned but successfully carried out the concert. The bunch in the waikiki bleachers repeated after the encore and the other crew, located in the dressing rooms beyond the hill replied once more. The fans gave the singers a wealth of applause.

In the waikiki bleachers were Audie Holstein, Bill Kahanamoku, Freddie Wilhelm, and Hiram Anhus, while the "echo" chorus consisted of Joe Brown, Sam Kahanamoku, "John D." Kaupiko, Pua Kealoha and David Kanahanmoku.

And then right after the concert the Hui Nalu swimmers came out and gave the Outrigger Canoe club the hardest relay that club had ever experienced in all its swimming history, the Hui Nalus losing, out by a touch.
