

LOOKS LIKE BUT FOUR TEAMS IN GRID LIST

On the basis of advance dope it looks as if there will be but four teams in the major football league here this season. The likely four are Town Team, National Guard, Palama and Navy.

The Army has not announced its policy yet, but the current report is that the Schofield post will conduct its own league and the Honolulu Sector will also have its own league. The winners in the two circuits will play off for the title of the Hawaiian department, and then the stars will be picked and formed into a team to play other island teams and also the Navy for the service championship.

The University of Hawaii, it is reported, plans to stay out of the league, arranging its own dates and games as it can with other teams.

The Navy is already at work in preparation for the season, and Palama starts work today. The Town Team has not called a practise date, but the players are said to be all lined up. The National Guard is trying to form a team, but has not gone far with the project yet. The Outrigger club is not expected to enter a team this season.
