Women Not To Be Admitted As Regulars

Women cannot join the Outrigger Canoe club as regular members.

They never could, but they thought they were going to be allowed to after a meeting of the members Thursday night. The well-oiled machinery that was to put through this proposition, which was practically unanimously endorsed by the members, slipped a gear when it was learned that the lease of the bathhouse prevented admitting women.

Amendments to the by-laws that had been previously drawn up were tabled, when word was received from the owners of the bath houses that are leased by the club that the lease has an express provision against admitting women to the club.

The entire matter was turned over to the board of directors for consideration, and until some future action is taken, the women will continue to be guest members, with no privilege of taking part in the administrative affairs of the club.

Reports for the year showed that financially as well as in other lines, the club had experienced a most successful year, the treasurer's report showing an income of $13,727.14 during the past fiscal year, and expenditures of $13,479.93, with total assets of $19,935.42.
