Swimming fans will remember Estelle Cassidy, who showed plenty of promise as an Outrigger Canoe club performer before going to school at the National Park Seminary in Washington, D. C. Football fans will recall her brother, Charles Cassidy, gridiron star for Cornell.

Last season Charles starred for Cornell and in due course of events was presented with jerseys, three in number, with the large letter "C" on each. All three were beautiful sweaters and during the Christmas holidays Estelle saw this collection of jerseys and set her heart on getting one. But all ordinary appeals failed to move her brother's adamant heart.

Finally, in January, when she had returned to Washington after her Christmas vacation in Ithica, she wrote a letter—and got a sweater.

Now the point of the story depends on the fans remembering Estelle's personal appearance. Estelle, because of plenty of swimming at Waikiki, is not a slim, thin girl. She is and always has been right in the pink of health and pleasingly plump. Bear that in mind.

"When a big, healthy girl like that complained that she was cold in Washington's wintry blasts, what else could I do but send her the sweater?" wrote brother Charles, explaining how it came about that Estelle finally got a Cornell sweater.
