SWIMMING

The crowd was slow in coming in last night and close to the starting time the stands were only about half filled.

The Kamehameha school chorus in their gray uniforms had seats on the end barge.

Ad Club fair signs decorated the sides of the end barge just above the turning platforms.

D. L. Conkling, president of the Hawaiian A. A. U., has been so busy with swimming that he has had no time to do any political campaigning.

While there were black clouds in the west the weather was good and a light breeze made the place cool.

The usual rope holders, Karratti and Waters were on the job again.

A punt was in the slip for the use of the judges in short distance events. It enabled them to better make their decisions.

The last and final call for the first race, the 200 meters breaststroke for men, was issued a few minutes before the starting hour.

The high dive stand was all ready by the time the meet started and was used last night.

The Kamehameha school chorus gave a song just before the start of the first race. The voices sounded beautifully carried across the water.

The crowd got a real thrill in the first race of the night when W. Kirschbaum of the Hui Makani nosed out Sam Kahanamoku in the 200 meters breaststroke.

The Hui Makani swimmer was a
