

HAWAII SWIMMERS IN THE OLYMPICS

Some of the Islands' Swiftest Fish Men Will Be in Try- outs, Including Duke Ka- hanamoku's Brother

HONOLULU, May 11.—The name Kahanamoku, of potent magic in the swimming world since 1912 when Duke Kahanamoku went from Hawaii to the Stockholm Olympiad and carried the colors of the United States to victory in the 100-meter freestyle swim, may shine with renewed luster this year, according to swimming authorities here.

Sam, younger brother of the Duke, is counted upon to revive the fame of the Kahanamoku family. He has been chosen as one of the members of the squad to be sent by the Hawaiian A. A. U. to the sectional tryouts on the mainland.

Sam is a freestyle sprinter and also has several fast breaststroke performances to his credit. He is 19 years old. His best freestyle performance was 100 meters open water in 1:00 3-5, a Hawaiian record and only one-fifth of a second over Duke's Olympic record.

The other members of the swimming squad are:

Mariechen Wehselau, holder of the world's woman's freestyle tank record of 1:03 for 100 meters.

Henry Luning, with a 100-meter backstroke record of 1:13 4-5, one-fifth of a second slower than the world's record.

William Kirschbaum, breaststroke swimmer with a performance of 3:02 1-5 for 200 meters.

Warren Kealoha, holder of the world's 100-meter backstroke record of 1:12 2-5.

Charles Pung, son of En Sue Pung, Chinese, who has played baseball in the senior league here for the past 25 years.

Pua Kealoha, member of the 1920 American freestyle Olympic relay team, and second to Duke Kahanamoku in the 100-meter race at Stockholm.

Members of the track and field squad include: Milton Carter, of Hilo, holder of the island high jump record of 5 feet 11 1-4 inches, established this year; Richard Gartley, formerly of Yale, holder of the island pole-vault record at 12 feet 7-8 inches, established this year; and John Watt, formerly of Cornell University, holder of the island 120-yard high hurdle record of 15 3-8 seconds.
