monthly children's magazine with over a million readers.

Jill is a 6th grade pupil at Kahala School. Her poem, "The Soft and Sometimes Wild Wind," was written when Jill was a 5th grade pupil and now appears in Highlights.

A girl of many interests, Jill is an excellent swimmer, and she also loves horseback riding. She is a junior member of the Outrigger Canoe Club, and the Honolulu Community Theatre for Youth.

Highlights For Children, edited by Dr. and Mrs. Garry Cleveland Myers and Dr. Walter B. Barbe, is published in Columbus, Ohio. The publication stresses development in reading, thinking and creating and is described by its editors as "fun with a purpose."

Canoe Club asks change in beach

The Outrigger Canoe Club has applied to the Corps of Engineers for a permit to construct a temporary groin near the club at 2909 Kalakaua Ave. to retain sand on the makai side.

Plans for the proposed groin may be inspected in Room 213, Headquarters Building 96, Fort Armstrong.

Any objections to the planned construction must be submitted to the Corps of Engineers in writing by Nov. 29.

Kahala Hilton Hotel while he attends the directors' meetings Kaiser Industries is conducting in Honolulu this week.

The Schapers were among a large crowd of directors, executives and their wives assembled at the Outrigger Canoe Club Monday evening for a cocktail reception. Traffic was backed up for miles along Kalakaua Ave. as guests arrived at the club and were welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. Edgar F. Kaiser.

Elsa says she's not exactly relaxed this week because, "We fly home Saturday morning arriving just in time for a cocktail party we're giving before the annual Los Altos Hunt Ball. When we arrived, I remembered someone I forgot to invite so I had to call her from Honolulu," she said.

If Honoluluans think the party pace is hectic here, just consider the Hunt Ball. "We start with individual cocktail parties, then people assemble at the Burlingame Country Club for dinner. The ball begins at 10 p.m. at the fabulous Chateau Remillard, home of Countess Lillian Remillard Dandini de Cesena. Why, the entrance hall is three stories high and looks on to the gold-gilded stairway," Elsa exclaimed. "Everybody dances all night. We're refreshed with breakfast about 1 a.m. and tip-toe home just before the sun rises."

Incidentally, the Schapers have the answer to every columnist's dream . . . a hideaway on Maui which they escape to twice a year.

Speaking of Rain

Rain reminds us of the advice society columnist Elsa Schaper gives to well-dressed women bound for cocktail parties during the splashy season. "I just slip my satin slippers into a plastic bag, put on a pair of sneakers and make a quick change when I get to the party," Elsa said.

Elsa scribbles the "Grapevine" for the Menlo-Atherton Recorder in Palo Alto, and is here this week with her husband, Ernest, vice president in charge of operations for the Kaiser Cement & Gypsum Corp. They're staying at the

This Town's Mad About Cribbage

By Anita Liptak

This is new trophy to be awarded at annual tourney between Press and Pacific Clubs.

"OLD AGE AND treachery will overcome youth and skill."

Thus spoke a member of the Pacific Club as he and fellow team members launched their annual cribbage battle against members of the Honolulu Press Club a few months ago.

And his prophecy proved correct. At least, the Pacific Club won the yearly doubles round-robin cribbage match—as it has four out of the last five years. Whether age is a deciding factor, however, is open to argument. Many a scarred and beaten Press Club player would chalk it up to lightning-fast play, years of experience in team
