OCC Repeats in Challenge

Outrigger Canoe Club successfully defended its Kaena Point Challenge Race title yesterday, taking more than an hour off last year's winning time in the 24-mile Haleiwa-to-Pokai Bay outrigger canoe event.

The fiberglass Manu Ula led from the start and crossed the finish line in three hours, seven minutes and 53.8 seconds. Hui Nalu was second in their Uhane to head the koa division entries in 3:10:49.8.

"It was smoother than last year," said Henry Ayau, a member of the winning nine-man crew. "In fact, about five miles after the start our steersman told us to unzip (the protective canvas). Thank god he said that—it was hot."

The 14 canoes had little difficulty in negotiating the course, only finding turbulent swells while rounding Kaena Point. While the rest of the tightly-grouped field chose to outside the rocks at Pohaku O Kauai, Hui Nalu took a chance to make up some ground on OCC and went in between the rocks. They found the going rough and gained little from their daring move.

In the 9½-mile iron-woman's race, OCC again led the field, turning in a 1:04:16.4 winning time over the course from Pokai Bay to Makaha Beach and back. The koa Hokulele of Lanikai Canoe Club was second overall in the 10-canoe race, trailing OCC by 34.1 seconds.

The next outrigger event scheduled is Sunday's Na Wahine O Ke Kai, a 38-mile women's race from Molokai to Oahu.

MENAGE A TUES. The dollars and cents repercussions of a pro football strike will be felt way out here in the middle of the Pacific. For starters, lots of pubs with TV screens count on big crowds for Mon. Night Football games and will be missing much anticipated revenue. . . . And the three local network affiliates will lose thousands of dollars in ad revenues. Last year, for instance, Ch. 9 lost about $30,000 when it couldn't carry its scheduled Sun. games because of satellite problems. . . . And there are lots of guys who pad their incomes by running pools. . . . Then there are even more guys like me who won't be losing a dollar or two every week in those same pools. . . . The Outrigger Canoe Club bought a table (for $200) at the Salute to Hawaii's Olympians luncheon (Wed. at the Princess Kaiulani Hotel) and instead of giving the tickets to club members, g.m. Ray Ludwig is turning them over to kids who participate in the Junior Olympics and Special Olympics. □ □ □

Froiseth paddles canoe club into shape

By Andy Yamaguchi
Advertiser Staff Writer

You've come a long way, wahine canoe paddlers. You raced in distance events for the first time in 1973. Then, in 1975, you did what men said you couldn't — cross the 40 miles of ocean between Molokai and Oahu.

And this summer, another breakthrough: a female head coach, Luana Froiseth of the Waikiki Surf Club.

But while some women might make the Molokai crossing to show they have as much endurance as men, Froiseth didn't take Surf Club's reigns to prove anything.

"Personally, I don't go for this women's lib stuff," said Froiseth, 27, who will be paddling tomorrow in the third Na Wahine O Ke Kai, the women's Molokai-to-Oahu canoe race.

"I didn't feel a woman should be a head coach," she said. "I'd always been coached by men."

"But as the season got closer, I felt maybe I should take control of the club," Froiseth said. She felt Surf Club was falling into disarray under the old regime, so she applied for the head coaching job and was elected by the club's board of directors.

"Luana did a good job," said Derrell DeMello, a Surf Club member who will paddle in the men's Molokai race Oct. 10. "The club was falling apart and she pulled it back together. And she's really good with the young kids."

Said Froiseth: "I enjoy working with kids. I like rotten kids, I like kids who answer you back, 'cause they're going to make good paddlers. Be firm with them and they're going to be so angry with you that they're gonna come back the next day and show you they can paddle."

Froiseth said there were moments when it felt "kinda weird" to be the boss, but she might be the most qualified person for the job. Her parents, Wally and Moku Froiseth, have been with Surf Club from the beginning. Luana, the fourth of their five children, has paddled with the club since she was 11.

"I like the water. I used to surf a lot before all the contests turned professional," she said. "Paddling is still a relaxed thing."

"What really got me interested was women's long distance racing, nine miles instead of the one- or two-mile races in regattas. If you lost a regatta race, you were a loser. But if you complete a distance race, you've accomplished some-

Molokai race today

Two-time champion Outrigger Canoe Club and Hui Nalu are favored today in the third Na Wahine O Ke Kai, the women's Molokai-to-Oahu outrigger canoe race.

Sixteen crews will leave Hale O Lono Harbor on Molokai's south shore at 7 a.m. The first canoes are expected to cross the finish line at Fort DeRussy Beach between 1 and 2 p.m.

Three California clubs are among the 16 entered.

The race covers 40 miles across the Kaiwi Channel and is considered the ultimate test for paddlers.

OCC won in 1979 and 1981.

The 1980 race was cancelled because surf in the channel was too rough.

"The race is growing," race director Hannie Anderson said. "The challenge of the Kaiwi Channel is something the women thrive on."

Each crew has 12 paddlers with six paddling and six in reserve on a chase boat at any one time.

Crews make changes by dropping two or three relief paddlers in the water ahead of their canoe. As the canoe passes by, several paddlers jump out to one side and the relievers climb in.

Hui Nalu paddles to win

HONOLULU (UPI) - Hui Nalu won Sunday's third Na Wahine O Ke Kai, the Women's Molokai-to-Oahu canoe race, crossing the choppy 40-mile channel in their koa canoe in a time of 6:43. Maui's Napili finished fourth with a 7:14:00 clocking.

Second place in the grueling race, considered the supreme test for outrigger canoe paddlers, went to Outrigger Canoe Club with their 6:58 performance.

The two-time champion of the event used a fiberglass canoe.

Hanohano came in third with a time of 7:08.

WAITING FOR THE WEEKEND: A nice story gets better: I itemed earlier this week that the Outrigger Canoe Club had bought a table for $200 at the Salute to Hawaii's Olympians luncheon and donated the table to the Special Olympics. At that luncheon, a free trip to the '84 Olympics in Los Angeles was given away in a drawing — and it went to one of the 10 children at the luncheon, thanks to the OCC. . . . Speaking of happy children: The wide-eyed children in Margaret Keane's paintings seem to be much happier in her recent works than in earlier ones. An exhibition of her paintings begins today at Center Art Gallery-Ala Moana. . . . Lots of fishermen and women have been coming home happy this week — mahimahi have been biting in unusual numbers for this time of year and the Oahu blue marlin fishery continues to challenge Kona's fleet. . . . Master mixologist Benny Supnet at the Top of Waikiki has just concocted a new drink — the Blue Marlin, with vodka, amaretto, blue curacao and something secret. □ □

Keane

DIS AND DOT: Downtown voters aren't seeing double. It's just that twin sisters are campaigning — Ellie Kupau for OHA trustee and Frances Kupau Schuman for the state House of Reps. . . . Did you know that the state Health Dept. rents a room in the Polynesian Apts. (above the semi-infamous Lollipop) for an air pollution monitoring device that must be kept air-conditioned? Rent is $385 per month. . . . Send in the punter dept.: Talk about preserving Polynesian ways: Bill Cravens, v-p and g.m. of the Polynesian Cultural Center in Laie, and his wife, Karen, have just had their 12th child, Rebekah Saumasina. As if that's not enough, Bill's assistant, Carl Fonoimoana, and wife, Nalani, can field a baseball team with their nine children. □ □ □

ISLE STYLE: The best laid plans etcetera dept.: Hyatt Kulima food and beverage mgr. Charly Abou-Assaly introduced a Mon. Night Football special — the price of drinks go down when a team scores — in Trotters Lounge the day that pro football players went on strike. . . . The Punaluu Punster read here yesterday about the Marijuana Ohana, Big Island parents who include their children in the harvesting of pakalolo, and said: "The family that picks together sticks together?" . . . Cablevision magazine is already plugging the Laff-Off with Andy Bumatai — "People were on the floor crying," one cable exec is quoted — although the special won't be broadcast until winter. . . . Honolulu PR consultant Eileen Mortensen, in Anchorage and Fairbanks to conduct workshops at the U. of Alaska, visited former islanders Tony and Lynette Nakazawa and baby daughter Amber and brought along their order of three dozen manapua from Yong Sing's-Alakea. As Hawaii coordinator for the Nat'l Organization of Women, Eileen was also asked to speak at the Alaska NOW convention. □ □ □
