The Wahines, made up of the seven seniors

from the two-time defending NCAA champion

University of Hawaii women's team, defeated

Pavilion at the University of Washington.

"It's probably the toughest field ever for both divisions," said UH assistant coach Dean Nowack, who is coaching the Wahines and OCC. "The seven seniors are putting it together now and, with Marsha Bond from Kentucky playing with them, they have a good shot at going all the way."

SOME OF THE WAHINES were on the Monarch Roofing team which won the women's open division two years ago, the first collegiate team ever to do so. However, Nowack said there are a number of teams with more experience and height that could halt the Wahines this year.

"There are a few teams that are much bigger than the university-level teams the Wahines have been playing," said Nowack, "and they put up a much bigger block.' Syntax, last year's champion, and runnerup Nick's Fishmarket have combined and, under the guidance of former UH Wahine All-
