aloha luncheon Aug. 23

Honolulu Clipped Wings will have an aloha luncheon at the Outrigger Canoe Club Aug. 23 at 11:30 a.m.

Guest speaker will be L. Ellsworth Perry, vice president of sales and service, Pacific and Orient, for United Air Lines.

Mrs. Hugh Duffield, delegate to the Clipped Wings National convention, held in Miami, Fla., will give a report and present the local chapter with the National Award for Consistently Outstanding Achievement for the past 11 years.

Clipped Wings is an organizanization of former United Air Lines stewardesses, whose national philanthropy is the assistance of the programs of the Retarded Children's Associations throughout the country. For the past 11 years the local chapter has worked closely with the Hawaii Association to Help Retarded Children and the Waimano Home.

Reservations for the luncheon may be made by calling Mrs. Don Deer, at 373-3486 or Mrs. Michael Combs, 457-178.

All former United Air Lines stewardesses are invited.

Ready-to-Wear

Waialae Country Club gave its first official club blazer to Francis H. Brown last week at a testimonial dinner celebrating his 77th birthday, but now any club member can buy the olive green cashmere jacket with the club crest stitched to the chest.

With this move, Waialae joins other Island clubs who have identifying coats or shirts for their members.

Oahu Country Club will provide the embroidered emblem with the club's name and the Hawaiian crest displayed between crossed golf clubs, but the member has to buy his own green jacket to sew it on.

A spokesman for Hawaii Country Club, which uses the same system, describes his club crest as "crossed golf clubs running rampant on a field of da kine." This also goes on a green blazer.

The Waikiki Yacht Club has just adopted an official navy blue dress shirt with a button-down collar and the club flag embroidered on the pocket as a uniform for members.

Both the Hawaii Yacht Club and the Kaneohe Yacht Club will sell their members a suitably marked T-shirt, and they feel that really takes care of the matter.

The Pacific Club, which approaches issues cautiously, has for several years considered adopting a club tie, but so far, hasn't.

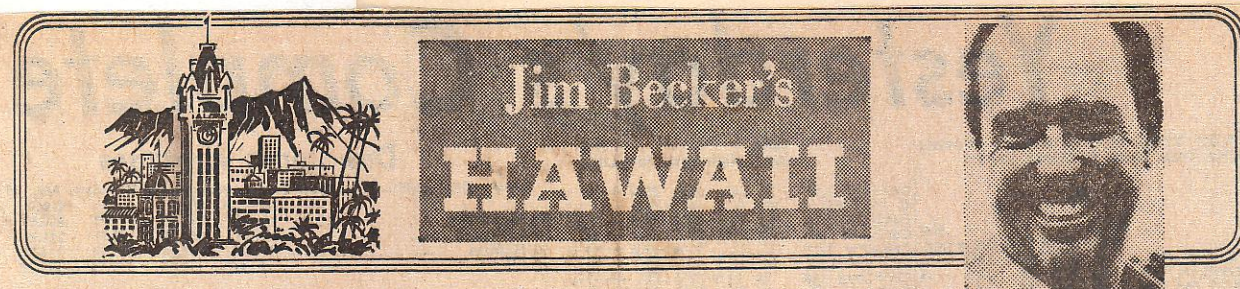

The Outrigger Canoe Club sells a sporty navy blue blazer with the club emblem embroidered on it to its officers and those who have been members 10 years or more.

Since airline employees, used car salesmen and head waiters have also taken up wearing blazers, the sportsman can occasionally be met with confusion.

A former president of the Outrigger Canoe Club, wearing his blazer in the Los Angeles airport was halted by a rather imperious woman who said, "My man, do you have anyone on your airline who speaks Italian?"

LET US PAUSE in the midst of our celebration of Statehood to talk with a man who remembers what Hawaii was really like long ago.

"This was a great country," says Fred W. Carter, "before you white folks got here."

Carter is only half-kidding. He is as haole as they come himself, but he was born in Honolulu in 1896, which as he points out was not only before Statehood, it was before Annexation.

"I'm the last of the blonde Hawaiians," he says, and he still is sort of semi-blonde. (And 5-11 and 200 pounds.) "I am a real Hawaiian, born when this was still a country."

Carter is 72 now, going on 73, and a graduate of McKinley High School, class of 1916.

"Three years ago I attended the 50th reunion of my class," he says, "at the Willows. There were 44 of us in the graduating class, and 25 of us made it for the 50th reunion. We even had three teachers."

"Janet Gault was one. Miss Woodward was another and Mrs. Guy Rockwell, wife of the architect. She was my English teacher."

"Some of us Hawaiians are pretty hardy. Look at the Steiners. Look at us Carters. Three of us, my brother, my sister and me, all in our 70's and all doing fine."

"I put it down to being raised in Waikiki and going surfing every day. I joined the Outrigger Canoe Club when it started, back in 1907. I was 11 years old."

"In those days, I used to do a lot of fishing — still do, but it isn't like it used to be — and I would use a throw net in front of the Outrigger, down by the Moana where the club was then."

"One throw of the net and there would be a fish in every puka of the net. All that is gone, now. Imagine that, a fish in every puka, right in front of the Moana hotel."

Carter used to live where Fort DeRussy is now. I asked him what he thought of Waikiki today.

"You could give it back to the Hawaiians as far as I am concerned," he said, "except that they wouldn't take it."

I asked Carter how far back his family goes in Hawaiian history.

"My father was born here, and his father before him," he said. "My wife is a haole girl from Maui, although she has just a trace of Tahitian. My first wife was a haole girl from Illinois. I met her on the boat. My sister and my mother were coming back from the Mainland and I went down to get them and there she was."

"Are you a missionary descendent?" I asked.

"No, dammit," he said. "Whalers."

Carter went to war when he left McKinley in 1916, came home a first lieutenant, began work at the Waipahu Plantation and recently retired from the Hawaiian Equipment Company, a subsidiary of Castle and Cooke.

He dabbled in sports through the years, and was owner of a semi-pro football team made up of McKinley Alumni.

"We toured the Mainland in 1947," he said. "We had Captain Howell of the police department on the team, and Bill Baker, the one-armed player. He was our center."

"Phillip Minn was the coach. We called him 'Sai Minn,' of course. Dr. Richard You was the team physician."

"There were 28 of us in all, and 24 had never been off this Island. Talk about your kua ainas."

(Kua ainas are "hayseeds" in Hawaiian.)

"We got to San Francisco and at the hotel I looked around and my team was gone. They all went riding the cable car. They put their bags and equipment and everything right down in the middle of the lobby."

"We finally got them to Ogden, Utah, and it snowed for the first game. We lost. We won the second game. It stopped snowing. Those kua ainas had never seen snow before."

Carter, however, was a regular Mainland visitor.

"I made my first trip up there in 1904, when I was 7 years old. And I went back in 1906, and was in on the San Francisco earthquake and fire."

"That was a fantastic pyrotechnic display. I always tell my kids I've seen the two greatest displays of all time."

"I saw the San Francisco fire, and I saw Dec. 7th. We lived in Kalihi then, and they flew right over us and we could see the whole thing. It was a very disheartening spectacle. We couldn't do a thing about it."

"Yep, I've seen everything and I've done everything. If I go tomorrow I haven't missed a thing."
